DEWPOINT ACQUIRES STRATEGIC ADVANTAGE CORPORATION

LANSING, Mich., November 21, 2005 —Dewpoint, an information technology integration company, today announced the acquisition of Lansing-based Strategic Advantage Corporation. The acquisition gives Dewpoint additional expertise to further develop its public sector practice, according to Dewpoint President Andrew Kotarba.

Barbara Dawson, Strategic Advantage Corporation president, joins Dewpoint as director of the public sector practice. “Barbara is recognized for her expertise in project management, business process engineering and business requirements design,” says Kotarba. “She and her staff have developed an impeccable reputation. They bring a diverse portfolio of public sector project experience to Dewpoint.”

Dawson has been actively involved in public sector consulting more than 15 years. Her experience includes numerous large-scale technology installations and strategic planning projects for several divisions within the State of Michigan government.

“Strategic Advantage Corporation’s expertise in workflow analysis, process design and requirements assessments are a perfect complement to Dewpoint’s extensive business technology knowledge,” says Dawson. “Joining forces with Dewpoint enhances our capability to provide customers with even greater information technology solutions to address their specific business requirements.”

According to Kotarba, the merger will enhance the company’s delivery of technology solutions. Dewpoint will be able to help clients make better decisions about utilizing technology to streamline and support business operations.
